Kevin Hagan represents businesses operating in highly regulated industries, with a focus on construction, healthcare, and commercial litigation. His practice centers on disputes where contractual risk, regulatory requirements, and operational realities converge.

Kevin advises and represents contractors, subcontractors, and project stakeholders in construction disputes involving construction defects, scope changes, extra work, delay and disruption, indemnity, and payment claims. He routinely handles disputes arising under complex contractual frameworks, including change order procedures, flow-down provisions, and insurance and risk transfer obligations. His work includes project-level counseling as well as litigation and arbitration.

In the healthcare sector, Kevin represents providers, payors, and healthcare system participants in matters involving regulatory compliance, reimbursement, and operational disputes, with particular experience addressing issues arising under the Stark Law and Anti-Kickback Statute (AKS). His work includes disputes and counseling related to financial relationships, compensation structures, data governance, and vendor and platform arrangements, as well as issues involving patient records and privacy obligations.

Kevin also represents clients in life sciences and technology-related matters, drawing on a background in pharmaceutical bioengineering, food & drug regulatory frameworks, and intellectual property. He advises inventors and developers on disputes involving emerging technologies, data use, and commercialization issues, including trademark and trade secret disputes, particularly where technical subject matter and regulatory oversight intersect.

Kevin's practice focuses on early claim development, risk management, and strategic dispute resolution, with an emphasis on aligning legal strategy with business objectives.
