Chris Kranda is an associate in the firm's Litigation Group, where he represents general contractors, subcontractors, and developers in navigating the complex legal landscape of the construction industry.

With a diverse litigation background, he previously worked at a labor and employment firm and served as a Deputy Prosecuting Attorney in King County where he gained valuable trial experience.

Since entering private practice in 2021, he has represented clients across a range of industries—including construction, healthcare, and manufacturing—in both state and federal courts, as well as before administrative agencies nationwide.

He earned his J.D. from Seattle University School of Law in 2019, where he externed for Senior U.S. District Court Judge Robert S. Lasnik and served as a Rule 9 prosecutor for King County. Chris graduated with honors from Seattle University in 2015.

Outside the courtroom, Chris is an avid outdoorsman who enjoys exploring the mountains and rivers of the Pacific Northwest.
